Lack of clues stymies hunt for missing Malaysian airliner

International search teams scour the ocean for clues that might show that the plane crashed

Keeping them flying

PHILIPPINES: MALAYSIA: MORE THAN 12 HOURS AFTER MALAYSIA AIRLINES FLIGHT MH370 VANISHED, THE MYSTERY OVER ITS FATE IS GROWING MORE MAJESTIC.

The missing bound plane made no distress calls, officials said, and the Malaysian authorities reported it might have begun to turn back to Kuala Lumpur to maintain contact, but the plane disappeared in an instant, leaving a trail of unanswered questions.

By early Monday the search effort had yet to confirm where the plane might have gone down, even a military aircraft and a ditch of sleep from 11,000 feet earlier indicated the waters south of Vietnam.

Admiral Abdul Rahman, the Malaysian and aviation chief, said samples from an oil slick discovered in the water had been collected and were being used to determine whether they had come from the plane.

STATION ALOHA
Habitat for ocean observation

A crackle in the Pacific 12 miles across gives scientists a laboratory for studying the sea.

By Timothy Hervey

"Aloha" is the Hawaiian word for love and affection, commonly translated to say hello or goodbye, but an acronym combined with other words to represent a kind Hawaiian greeting.

At a lonely spot in the Pacific Ocean, known as Station ALOHA, the word has a different meaning: "A Long-term Observing Platform for the Indo-Western Pacific."

On the surface, the acronym doesn't quite capture the beautiful scope of the work. But listen to the scientific observations and complex experiments at Station ALOHA and you'll learn there's no shortage of aloha in the place.

"I would love to go out there more often," said Francis André, an Oregon State University oceanography professor who has conducted research at Station ALOHA over the years. "It's a place of high-quality research and excellent observation conditions around the world. Look at that and you'll understand why it's an amazing place."

This year marks 25 years since the station was

Scientists on a research vessel lower a conductivity-temperature-depth moorings into the ocean at Station ALOHA. The device takes water samples and a variety of other measurements at different depths.

Facebook Like

Facebook is a social networking website that is operated by Facebook Inc. The number of "Likes" are the number of individual Facebook profiles that have signed onto Facebook pages created and/or branded to The Honolulu Star Advertiser. "Likes" may allow content from these Facebook Pages to be displayed on their personal News Feed tab. The number represented in this report is the total "Likes" and may contain individuals that "like" more than one page (e.g. may contain duplicates). A Facebook profile (account) may not equate to an individual person.

Twitter Followers:

Twitter is a real-time short messaging service that works over multiple networks and devices. Followers are registered accounts of Twitter who may receive one of The Honolulu Star Advertiser branded "tweets" on their personal Twitter account pages. (A "tweet" consists of a text message of 140 characters or less.) The number represented in this report is the total "followers" and may contain accounts that "follow" more than one feed (e.g. may contain duplicates). A Twitter account may not equate to an individual person.

Statement

To Members of the Alliance for Audited Media:

Data annotated as "subject to audit" represent items reported on the most recent AAM member's Publisher's Statement and will be verified at the next scheduled audit period.

Other data have been examined in accordance with AAM's Bylaws and Rules, and included such tests and other audit procedures as we considered necessary under the circumstances.

In our opinion, the other data items contained in this report are fairly stated in all respects material to the totals reported.
